Japan Plans Big Increase in Military Forces.

Eventually She Will Have Forty-Two Divisions.

PLANS TO TREBLE THE NAVY

Would Be 3 Fleets With Dreadnaughts Each.

Will Begin as Soon as Finances Will Permit.

Correspondence of the Associated Press. Tokio, Aug. 10.—Japan has made preliminary plans to increase her army by 50 per cent and to build three times the number of dreadnaughts and times the number of dreadnaughts and battle cruisers previously planned.

No official announcement has been made, but it is understood that the project at a recent conference of field marshals and fleet admirals includes the creation of an army of twenty-one corps, or forty-two divisions, and the enlargement of the navy so that it will eventually include three main fleets, each to consist of eight dreadnaughts and eight battle cruisers. Each of the new army divisions will be composed of three regiments, instead of four, as at present.

of this increase, four new divisions are covered by the army program laid down in 1906 when it was decided to increase the number of divisions to 25, or to a total strength of 100 regiments. This program has not yet been carried into effect. Writers on military matters estimate that the new plan contemplates an eventual enlargement of the Japanese army by 50 per cent above its present strength, with a corresponding enlargement of the reserves due to the great numbers the reserves due to the great numbers passed thru the service each year. Large Naval Program.

The naval program adopted at the list session of the diet was to fill out fleet of eight dreadnaughts and six William H. Taylors, Cape May, Courta fleet of eight dreadnaughts and six battle cruisers. The new naval proposal therefore means that Japan plans to build two squadrons each to be composed of eight dreadnaughts and eight battle cruisers, and two additional cruisers to fill out the present battle cruisers. The estimated expenditure involved is large. That for the army is placed at about $57,150,000, and that of the navy at about $540,000,000. It is probable that the actual costs would be much higher as the estimates mentioned above are based upon figures worked out before the control of the

Under the new military program, Japan would have 125 regiments, as against the present 84, there being now in existence 21 divisions, each of four regiments. An increase of 42 regiments is provided for.

Of this increase, four new divisions are covered by the army program laid down in 1906 when it was decided to increase the number of divisions to 25, or to a total strength of 100 regiments. "I told him that Captain Archie would soon return home and the colonel broke in with. Of course he must come home. He is afraid people will call him a slacker—after what he has done. When I told him that the major was rapidly improving and at the time of our meeting declared he would be back in the fighting before three weeks had elapsed, the colonel smiled. I suppose the major is quarreling with the nurses right now. His knee is a bit painful but he is full of fight."

Mr. McGraw devoted much of his time abroad to the men in the ranks.

with the American Armies in France, Aug. 26.—American patrols had the best of some encounters in the Toul and Weevre regions today. In the Toul area, an American patrol killed and wounded four boches. During a patrol encounter in the Woevre an American doughboy was wounded in sixteen places by machine gun bullets. Ten struck him between the knee and the waist, three entered his calf and three his arms. He will recover. This is believed to constitute a record number of wounds received during a minute's skirmishing without causing death.

Another American soldier, despite time abroad to the men in the ranks. He had "chow" with them and swap-ped lights. While his mission was an important one and included interviews with General Pershing and Premier Clemenceau, he found time to learn the viewpoint of the doughboys. Talked With Hun Officer.

Talked With Hun Officer.

Mr. McGraw was especially impressed with a talk he had with a Prussian officer in a prison camp within a few miles of Paris, where 7,300 Germans were held in captivity.

"I saw boys of 17 and 18 years there. With them were men of 49. They were well treated but there was a pathetic something—a dog tired, hopeless expression on their faces that touched me. The men I saw have been licked—we like that word in Oklahoma. They have been licked properly and well.

"One officer, a Prussian, who told me he had been educated in London Another American soldier, despite a torn face and a stomach wound from grenade fragments, pressed for-ward and protested violently against being returned to the dressing station. American airmen again raided Conflans Sunday, bombing railway tracks, blowing up an ammunition car and damaging a roundhouse. Forty bombs were dropped. All our machines returned safely despite a terrific aerial barrage and an encounter with German planes. "One officer, a Prussian, who told me he had been educated in London and spoke English perfectly, asked me why the United States had entered the

"'Why did your country enter the fight against us? Why did you become angry?' he asked.

"To discourage Christmas gifts is to abolish Christmas, and I do not believe you can any more abolish Christmas than you can abolish Christmas than you can abolish Sunday or the Ten Commandments. "Christmas is the one season of the year when people of the whole world take stock of their virtues and failures, and strike a balance between their selfishness and their charity. It is the season when the blessings of life loom largest, and those who can find good cheer for themselves wish everyone else to share it, when the well fed think of the hungry, strong hands are extended to the weak, the happy sympathize with the afflicted—a season of hearty good will to man. Kept Boche On Run.

"We will have the boche on the run again in the morning if we can keep this pace up," said one of the men, "they cannot stand up under this dose much longer."

"He was right. The Germans retreated next morning. Our men are doing wonderful fighting. I saw the marines coming out of action. They were 'sore." They did not want to come out. One chap had received a slight wound on the bridge of his nose. He was covered with blood. When I asked him what happened he said, 'shrapnel,' and continued on his march. Another Man's hands were caked with blood. "Helped fix up my pal's leg,' he explained, 'we did not have a whole river of water while we were in there."

To not wonder that the French have welcomed our men and to see them in the midst of the fighting, is an inspiration. Premier Clemencear had nothing but words of highest praise for them."

DRESS BY ANNE RITTENHOUSE.

Primitive Fringe Is Brought Out on Our New Frocks as a Striking Fashion, and It Is Often Made in Primitive Way from the Material of the Frock Itself.

New York.—Oh, we are learning many things during this war! We may begin to spin soon. We have learned to knit and crochet, to cover buttons and do our own braiding, to quilt bits of cotton and satin, to embroider and use water colors, and now we are learning to fringe material in the old, old way.

satin frock with no other trimming than itself, in battleship gray. The fringe at the hem is made from the satin, the buttons are covered with it, and the belt is a piece of it, quilted.

All of these things give us more interest in our clothes, and they do not tend to lessen the appearance of our costumes. We treat with more respect that garment to which we have given some of our own vitality. It seems far more precious than the thing we picked up in a shop one afternoon and had charged to a husband, if husband there was. Such transactions did not build a bridge between the possessed and the possessor.

Trimming Garments with Fringe.

It is a sign of the times that we are they call it "left-off clothing," and they are thinking rather more about making the most of that commodity there than here, because they have been in the war longer and are feeling the strain of war waging more keenly than we. But we, too, should think of making the best use of it, thus anticipating a period, sure to come, when there is greater need here than now.

Once, you know, it all went either to poor relations or to one's household servants. There was always some cousin in the country or in some out-of-the-way town, with a large family and a figure like your own or near enough so that she could make your old things do very nicely. And somehow you took a kind of comfort in thinking that she would work her fingers weary over your old togs, cleaning them and pressing them and fixing them up for best. Maids were glad to get cast-off finery too, and it was not unknown for women in some parts of the country to pay womenglad to get cast-off finery too, and it was not unknown for women in some parts of the country to pay women-by-the-day not in currency, but in some desirable plece of discarded clothing. In fact, in the South young women who work by the day have been known to begin negotiations for certain gowns or suits they admired long before they were worn out. "I'll work three days for you, when that is old, if you'll let me have it," has been the suggestion. And so the new gown goes thru its first season mortgaged from the beginning.

Now things have changed a little. Maids and women-by-the-day have gone into munition or other warwork, and mayhap they are paying more, than we are for the clothes they wear. At any rate, our discards no longer allure them. And in the general industrial and social upheaval it may be that the country cousin is better off than before and needs not of our contributions.

In Germany, you kaow, they go about the utilization of old clothes in a very systematic way. All discarded things are taken to local centers, where, under expert management, they are renewed tnd rejuvenated and then sold over again for a small price. As they are entirely disinfected and sterilized and transformed in appearance thru the skill of the workwomen employed in these workrooms, there is no ployed in these workrooms, there is no stigma attached to wearing these restigma attached to wearing these rejuvenated things.

In our own land much has been done to stimulate an interest in the work of restoring old clothes. In some of the domestic science colleges special emergency war courses have been given in this work, including a scientific treatment of the work of cleaning and dyeing. In the old days the products of these work classes were sent to the women of Belgium. Some may still go to the women of the devasted zones in France. But as the autumn comes and brings cooler weather and more of the gloomy results of war, we shall probably have full need of these things in our own land. But whatever you do with your old clothes, remember there is need for them somewhere.
